democracy

Engaging democracy as a means to ensure people's participation in their own development, and to build peace and stability in societies that have suffered from conflict. It is about promoting the rights of all people, including women and children, and ensuring that they are not denied their basic rights. Democracy is a process, not a destination. It is a way of life that is based on the principles of freedom, justice, and equality.

United Nations Democracy Fund

As stressed at the high-level panel discussion, the world is facing a crisis of democracy. The erosion of democratic institutions and values is a global trend that is threatening the future of our planet. It is time to recommit ourselves to the principles of democracy and to work together to build a more just and equitable world.

United Nations Democracy Fund is committed to supporting the work of civil society organizations and individuals who are working to promote and protect democracy. We are looking for partners who are committed to the values of freedom, justice, and equality, and who are willing to work with us to make a difference in the world.

An UNDEF project in Gambia facilitated the National Assembly's passing of an Access to Information Bill in July 2021. With this, Gambia becomes the last English-speaking country in West Africa to recognize access to information as a legal right. It marks the first time in Gambia's history that civil society has worked directly with the Government on legislation from conception to enactment, all made possible by UNDEF's support.

Implemented by The Gambia Press Union, the project built a coalition of civil society and media organizations -- the Civil Society Coalition on Freedom of Information -- which engaged with Government and drafted the proposed legislation for the freedom of information bill; created a platform for dialogue with the Ministries of Justice and Information to allow for direct consultations and reach a consensus on the legislation; provided training for journalists on the topic; and conducted advocacy among the general public to build wide support for access to information as a tool to enhance accountability and good governance.

An UNDEF project in Chile is seizing the historic opportunity of the country's current constitutional process to ensure women's participation and the inclusion of gender content. Implemented by Centro Regional de Derechos Humanos y Justicia de Género, this nation-wide initiative is working to advance women's understanding of a new constitution's importance to them and their rights; generate debates on key gender issues; and advocate for the inclusion of gender aspects in the drafting process.

On 15 June, the project brought together online over 100 civil society organizations and social leaders as well as 35 constitutional assembly delegates, key actors of the reform process, to discuss and agree on the principal components of a gender-sensitive constitutional agenda. The agenda frames the key demands for the coordinated advocacy efforts of stakeholders towards the inclusion of gender issues in constitutional debates and deliberations.
