no more than ever. Do not think that one country alone could be able to deal with these complex issues in a satisfactory manner. To me, this seems rather naive. We need multilaterally agreed concepts and international cooperation to successfully deal with this global scaled challenge.

Against this backdrop the New York Declaration for Refugees and Migrants stands as a groundbreaking achievement, and so is the successful conclusion of the negotiations on the text of the Global Compact for Migration of July 2016.

This remarkable success shows that the multilateral system is capable of tackling highly complex and contested global issues, that it can deliver even at times "here the value of multilateralism is increasingly questioned"

In Marrakech in December, for the first time in history, we will adopt a comprehensive multilateral framework for the international management of migration. It is the world's chance to set an example of political determination, solidarity and unity.

What is why we highly appreciate the overarching objective of today's event to build up momentum for the Morocco conference.

It is also an opportunity to share best practices, to exchange innovative ideas and to build partnerships in order to give the .lobal

Moreover, the significantly support data initiatives of the World Bank to achieve more evidence-based and coherent migration data.

Last but not least, the work towards faster, cheaper and safer transfer of remittances in close collaboration with diaspora organizations.
