The migration-security nexus is also void if neither

In this context, the OSCE will strive to be one such regional forum in which the governments of Central Europe will be represented, and in which the issues of migration will be considered, and in which the role of civil society will be acknowledged.

It is also important to note that the OSCE has a long history of working with civil society, and that this experience can be leveraged to support the development of a new model of migration management.

Finally, it is important to recognize that the challenges of migration management are complex and multifaceted, and that no single solution will be able to address all of them.

Therefore, it is essential to develop a comprehensive approach that takes into account the needs and concerns of all stakeholders, and that is based on a clear understanding of the underlying causes of migration.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the OSCE has a unique opportunity to play a leading role in the development of a new model of migration management in Central Europe.

This model should be based on a clear recognition of the rights and responsibilities of all stakeholders, and on a commitment to principles of dignity, respect, and equality.

It should also be based on a recognition of the need for a comprehensive approach that takes into account the needs and concerns of all stakeholders.

Finally, it should be based on a clear recognition of the need for a long-term perspective, and for a commitment to sustainable development.
