

Changing age structures and sustainable development in youthful societies

Monday, 3 April 2017 (noon–1 p.m.)
United Nations Headquarters, Conference room 4, Conference Building

Many developing countries are in the early or intermediate stages of the demographic transition, which are associated with relatively youthful populations. This presentation will address policy issues relevant for these countries, including prioritising the improvement of health, especially of mothers and children, the extension of sexual and reproductive health care services, investment in human capital, the promotion of gender equality, and policies in support of productive youth employment and social pensions in contexts of informality of the labour market.

Keynote Speaker

Eliya Zulu
Executive Director and co-Founder of the African Institute for Development Policy (AFIDEP)

For more information, contact the Population Division, Department of Economic and Social Affairs, United Nations Secretariat.