Globalization context

- National security focuses on defence of the state from external attack
- National health security relates to defence against internal and external public-health risks and threats
- Implication - health risks and threats do not respect borders
(people, animals, and goods travel around the world faster than ever before)

Globalization context

- Health is deeply interconnected with the environment, trade, economic growth, social development, national security, and human rights and dignity
- In a globalized and interdependent world, the state of global health has a profound impact on all nations—developed and developing
- Powerful synergies arise when national interest coincides with the need for concerted regional and global action
- An unprecedented convergence of global health and foreign policy

Relevance with global health

Two ways:

- a) by exploring how foreign ministers and foreign policy could add value to health issues of international importance, and
- b) by showing how a health focus could harness the benefits of globalisation, strengthen diplomacy and respond to new thinking

Main actors in global health (optional)

- Civil society now represents a major force for change
- Main actors involved in global health (governments, regional organisations, non-governmental organisations, foundations, private-public partnerships, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), and the UN and its agencies, specifically WHO, UNICEF, UNAIDS, and UNDP)
- New partnerships and alliances emerging that include multiple stakeholders, networks, and movements, within countries and across borders and regions

Basic premises and shared values to the FPGH

- Initiative based on the recognition that life is the most fundamental of human rights, and that life and health are the most precious assets
- Both technical and political dimensions to protecting and promoting global health
- This means that health issues do not only belong to ministries of health and the WHO, especially when they are cross-cutting in nature

Background to the FPGH

- FPGH-outlined the broad linkages between global health and foreign policy
- Using this linkage, ten priority areas identified to offer a new scope for foreign policy
- In Oslo on March 20, 2007 the seven ministers agreed to an ambitious and progressive agenda for action that details its future work in each of the priority areas
