personnel have been reported. We urge the UN to ensure that all of these allegations are investigated in an impartial, thorough, and timely manner, and to ensure that substantiated cases are appropriately dealt with, whether through disciplinary measures or through referral to home states.

We also continue to encourage the UN to undertake analysis of the cases, to better understand the dynamics giving rise to these crimes.

It is also useful to have the undated table of national provisions regarding Member States' establishment of jurisdiction over their nationals for relevant criminal offences. In this regard, we thank the Secretary General for the latest update of the table as of June 2019. We would encourage all Member States to contribute to this table to provide clarity on where jurisdiction can be established and where gaps remain.

In closing, let us reiterates our unwavering support to the zero-tolerance policy of the Secretary General. No one, including UN officials and experts on mission, who are the "face" of the United Nations to the world, should be above or outside the law.
