3. The definition of nationals includes persons with a permanent residency in the Netherlands and – concerning subsection c – persons who receive Dutch nationality after the commission of the crime.
4. In terms of providing a basis for the exercise of universal jurisdiction by the Netherlands, the first element mentioned above is the most relevant part, as it allows the authorities to investigate and prosecute the crimes covered by the International Crimes Act when these have been committed abroad by foreign nationals against foreign nationals. However, the International Crimes Act does not provide for unlimited universal jurisdiction in respect of international crimes. The judicial authorities of the Netherlands cannot prosecute alleged international crimes committed abroad by foreigners against non -nationals without the suspect having been identified and present in the country. The decision to investigate and prosecute is based on a decision by the public prosecutor's office.
5. The International Crimes Act does not require that the conduct under investigation or prosecution is also criminalized in the State of nationality of the suspect, or in the State in which the crime was committed. Hence, double criminality is not a prerequisite for the investigation or prosecution of international crimes.
6. In terms of its material scope of application, the International Crimes Act criminalizes genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression based on the provisions of the Rome Statute, while taking into account the relevant Rome Statute amendments the Netherlands has ratified. In addition to the Rome Statute, the International Crimes Act criminalizes torture (Article 8) and enforced disappearance (Article 8a) as stand-alone crimes in order to implement the obligations of the Netherlands under the Convention against Torture and the International Convention for the Protection of all Persons from Enforced Disappearance.
7. In the past twenty years, the Netherlands has invested a significant amount of time and resources in the investigation and prosecution of individuals suspected of having committed core international crimes. Special teams within the national police service and the prosecution service have undertaken highly complex investigations, which have led to a significant number of convictions and important steps in the development of relevant case law. An overview of these cases can be found at www.warcrimes.nl.
8. In addition to the International Crimes Act, the Netherlands Criminal Code (Article 381) provides a basis for the exercise of universal jurisdiction by the Netherlands over the crime of piracy committed on the high seas.
9. Additional information regarding the relevant national legal framework and its application in the Netherlands is available in the following reports:
 - Human Rights Watch, The Legal Framework for Universal Jurisdiction in the Netherlands, 2014, https://www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/related_material/IJ0914Netherlands_0.pdf;
