International Law and Compensation: Recent Developments and Future Prospects

Panel Discussion organized by the Permanent Missions of Italy and Latvia, together with Foley Hoag LLP

Concept Note

The obligation to provide reparation and compensation for internationally wrongful acts is a key tenet of international law. Clarifying its framework, application and content is increasingly important, including on issues related to international claims commissions, State-to-State dispute settlement and climate change.

This panel of experts will focus on recent developments related to compensation and international law, including the recent decision by the International Law Commission to include compensation in its long-term programme of work. It will also discuss recent developments regarding registers of damage.

The aim is to provide legal advisers and delegates with helpful information on recent developments and future prospects on this important issue.
