PART I: The Non-Legally Binding Instrument on All Types of Forests (forest instrument)⁵

Thematic Clusters of the Forest Instrument National forest resources and the connected sector – although usually quite scattered and note very rentable - are increasingly taking a strategic, cross-cutting role in environmental, territorial and economic and social development policies. Currently there is the need not only to ensure an effective strategic coordination and direction at the national level, but also between the regional forest policy and other related planning activities (rural development policies, sector policies, environmental policies, climate change mitigation policies, energy policies, policies for the management water resources, management policies of protected areas and Natura2000 sites, etc.) The main national planning instruments providing intervention measures for the forest sector are the following ones: National Strategic Plan for the rural development 2007-2013 and its regional programmes co-financed by FEASR funds and National Strategic Framework 2007-2013 co-financed by structural funds of regional and interregional operating plans and by the fu
