Remarks by Under-Secretary-

To that end, this paradigmshift will require policymakers to understand that, before addressing sustainable development, we fingeted to tackle sustainable ancingor we run the risk/expose ourselves to the risk of a "redevelopment" value chain with no control overthe flow of funds no financial resources policy space and effinitely no development

Therefore in order to break this vicious cycle frican policymaking for development finance will have to give the "driver's seat" to domestic resources mobilization

But, in doing sowe face anothærhallenge the weakness of domestic resources mobilization ԳJoՖ967([()-տոխորհաններան (միցանան) է քահJcpmbine4d [(i)-2 (ns)-1(0 Td [(t)-2 (he) 0 Td (or)3 (,)Tj (-4 (om) (i)-2 (c)- development goalsS(DG) investmentrisks and maximizeSDG impact; The integration into regional and global value chainsby boosting thedomestic value added and improving access to resources and technology—plays an impartambitigatingrole in terms of minimizing SDG investment rissk

How then do we factor in trust-institutional trust? SDG 16 is a matter of survival for all SDGs in Africa. It is said that institutional trust is an intangible asset with a huge impact on financing for development and consequently a clear and strong risk mitigant. It is also fundamental for leadership to acquire the legitimacy et ds to mobilize civil society for the development process. How? Through the nexus that links credibility with legitimacy and leadership. Consequently, trustworthiness is an indispensable element for rallying internal actors and external stakeholdersibe the country's development agenda.

To that end, building trust becomes a crucial dimension of policy making it is againsthis background that it is understood that the most effective way to build trust and credibility is via the governance value chain.

In this regard, there are two key issues that effective national and international governance need to address in order to ensure the sustainability of development financing: illicit financial flows and international tax regulations.

The Africa we want, is the Africa the world needs!
