Mr. Petrie stated that the success of the elections will significantly depend on the way the different actors will manage the results. . Given the positive signs, ERSG Petrie concluded that predictions are not very useful and that the focus should remain on our commitment to successful elections. In this regard he proposed to organize a high level conference towards the end of 2010 to start the process of shifting the focus from the short term perspective to the long term perspective.

In his closing remarks, the Chair thanked all partners who had contributed to the needs of the elections. Referring to the debate of the Security Council the day before in which members of the Security Council encourage the PBC to assist the Government of Burundi in laying the foundations for long-term development in Burundi and in mobilizing the support needed to consolidate peace and security, he suggested that the PBC would need to work on five types of coherence: (1) coherence of the short-term with the long term agenda, (2) coherence of public investment with private investment in peacebuilding, (3) coherence of the political and security approach with the socio-economic approach, (4) coherence of national, regional and international approaches, (5) coherence – or managing the tension - between the need to address multiple challenges and the need to prioritise. He mentioned the forthcoming opportunities during the course of this year for the PBC to contribute to this coherence and define its future engagement with Burundi, such as the preparatory process for the new PRSP cycle, the review of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding and the discussions with the Government on the future of the UN in Burundi.
