

The Women's Federation for World Peace International (WFWPI) stands united with the global community in our commitment to support the United Nations in achieving the New Agenda for Peace. At this juncture in history, Member States have an opportunity to make decisions together by investing in conflict resolution and conflict prevention efforts, financing for climate action, gender equity, meaningful youth involvement and capacity building.

Climate Action: Addressing climate change is addressing our basic right to a clean, healthy, and sustainable environment and brings the conditions for development and prosperity to communities and nations. Education is needed in order to change the mindset of individuals and empower them with new ideas so that they may work toward removing destructive practices that have been ingrained into society and replacing them with new and more beneficial practices. Nature-based principles should be common practice, involving the general principles of no waste, sustainable living, and permaculture principles. Win-win partnership between government and civil society to create policies that support impactful implementation such as subsidizing education programs on regenerative agriculture, designing homes, communities and businesses that work with nature and climate smart technologies.

We encourage the Member States and global leaders to build capacities for the efforts to protect the environment to fulfil their human rights obligations and commitments, and to enhance cooperation, mitigating actions and educate on programs, incentives and actions that meet the needs of HRC Resolution 48/13 the Human Right to Clean and Healthy and Sustainable Environment. Encouraging businesses, manufacturers, and heavy CO2 emitting businesses such as fuel stations to engage in partnerships with civil society and education sectors in projects that are regenerative such as funding green education programs for children and young people, designing and building green communities through community recreation areas and food forests.

Women Leadership, Conflict Resolution and Civil Society: The collective voices of women, civil society, and diverse communities are the powerful catalysts that can reshape the narrative of nuclear disarmament, infusing it with empathy, resilience, and a vision of peace. Local knowledge, nurtured by the collective wisdom of communities -

