Statement of

Assistant Secretary-General Michèle Coninx, Executive Director, CTED

Excellencies, distinguished participants,

I thank you for this opportunity to brief you on the updated electronic assessment and analytics tools of the Counter-Terrorism Committee and its Executive Directorate.

Since our establishment, 17 years ago, we at CTED have worked in tandem with the Committee to enhance the effectiveness of our work by establishing a robust assessment and stocktaking methodology to strengthen our understanding of progress and remaining shortfalls in -terrorism measures and endeavours.

Over the years, the Committee and CTED have complemented their assessment methodology through assessment tools such as the Detailed Implementation Survey, (or DIS) and the Overview of Implementation Assessment (or OIA), which have proven extremely useful in helping Member States comply with the requirements of the relevant Council resolutions.

Those tools have also served as key stocktaking resources to produce global surveys the relevant resolutions.

They have also facilitated our analytical work on emerging issues, trends and developments, which have been made available throughout the United Nations system.

With the completion last year of the desk reviews of 67 States, CTED achieved the key milestone of completing the full-cycle stocktaking of all 193 Member States, in accordance with the and processes could therefore not have arrived at a better time.

Excellencies, distinguished participants,

In its presidential statement security caused, issued in January 2021, the Security Council encouraged Member States to continue cooperating with the Committee and CTED.

It also underscored that neutral, expert assessment of the implementation of resolution 1373 (2001) and other relevant resolutions is the core function of CTED and that the analysis and recommendations from these assessments are an invaluable aid to Member States in identifying and addressing gaps in implementation and capacity.

Acting pursuant to resolution 2395 (2017), in which the Council directs CTED to update its survey tools, my team will today present the new cloud-based assessment and analytical portal that will host the new electronic DIS and the revised OIA.
