

Effective 1 November 2022. Revised October 2022.

1. This guidance document sets out the temporary and extraordinary transitional measures for uniformed rotations, repatriations, and deployments (hereafter referred to as “rotations”) to and from United Nations Peacekeeping Operations and relevant Special Political Missions in a COVID-19 environment. The requirements by host-and transit countries must be observed at all times.
2. These measures are designed to prevent the spread of COVID-19 during rotations of formed units into countries that host United Nations Peacekeeping Operations and relevant Special Political Missions, in Troop or Police Contributing Countries (T/PCCs) and in transit countries, thereby protecting vulnerable communities and populations, while at the same time maintaining the Missions’ uniformed operational capabilities for mandate delivery, protecting the health and safety of United Nations personnel and mitigating reputational risk to the Organization.
3. The measures, initially established for the period 1 July to 31 December 2020, were first extended until 31 March 2021 and subsequently extended every six months with the previous extension up to 31 October 2022.
4. The measures have now once again been revised and will be effective from 1 November 2022 until 30 April 2023, pending significant developments that may warrant a review at an earlier stage. These revised measures will be kept under review based on developments in the COVID-19 situation, including the spread of COVID-19 “variants of concern”, the national vaccination rates in the local community, local health care infrastructure and availability of diagnostic testing capacity and treatments locally, amongst other factors.

5. This guidance document applies to formed units, individual uniformed personnel (IUP), national support elements and any other national personnel, whose movement in and out of the country hosting the Peacekeeping Operation or relevant Special Political Mission is by
