ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COMMISSION
COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN
2004 Session

Permanent Representation of Chile
H.E. Ambassador Yvonne M. Williams
Permanent Representative of Chile to the United Nations

NEW YORK
February 24, 2003

Cordially yours,

Madam Chair / Mr. Chairman, Distinguished delegates

I am honoured to address the Commission on behalf of Women in the UN annual forum which tackles the most important issues of our time and focuses on promoting women empowerment around the world. My delegation associates itself with the statement adopted by the Conference on behalf of the European Union.

Madame Chair / Mr. Chairman,

This year's priority theme, the economic empowerment of all women and their role in poverty reduction and sustainable development, is extremely timely. The Millennium Development Goals. Already in 1995 the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action stressed the need for policies aiming at the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas:

However, today we note one key constraint in achieving gender equality that women and girls in rural areas remain the least educated group in the world, rural men and urban women. Especially in poor and remote areas where they face structural constraints and gender discrimination, conditions which put into question the realization, by 2015, of the Millennium Development Goals 2, 3 and 5. To revert these sustained efforts of Governments and relevant stakeholders are needed in order to ensure that rural women can have better access to productive resources and infrastructure, health services and facilities, training and education. In order to achieve the conditions of change and development, it is of paramount importance that they receive a quality education at a young age and that women's participation in farmer associations and support for local business, including micro and small enterprises, is fully encouraged.

Greece remains committed to the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action (BPA), as well as to the Convention for the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) and its national plan for the full implementation of Article 14 of this Convention which provides for the necessary measures in particular for the elimination of discrimination in rural areas.

In this respect, the Greek Constitution (in Art. 116, par. 2) promotes substantive gender equality, by stipulating that the State adopts "any measure to eliminate existing inequalities to the detriment of women". In fact, gender mainstreaming in public policies and systematic gender impact assessment of new laws constitute key aspects of the Greek national program for gender equality.

Regarding job participation of women, the government has now developed entrepreneurship initiatives while at the same time steps have been taken to decrease the percentage of unemployed women and to guarantee a higher access of women to the labor market. All relevant efforts are currently challenged by the current financial and economic crisis. On the one hand, women face difficulties to face, and by the way, the economic crisis has increased the gap between men and women. Women are more likely to be adversely affected than men. Women's economic empowerment has become an imperative element in achieving sustainable economic growth.

The emerging theme of this session, namely engaging young women and men, girls and boys to advance gender equality, is of critical importance for the empowerment of women and girls. It is unfortunately common that de jure gender equality doesn't go hand in hand with de facto equal treatment of women. Gender stereotypes are regularly reproduced in the mass media and combating them should start at the youngest possible age as eliminating gender stereotypes.

In order to have a favorable environment increased political representation of women in the political and economic decision-making process. Despite the fact that women are half of the world population, they remain largely underrepresented in national parliaments and within the public administration, and only 1/5 of them are in governmental positions. Gender responsive policies should be adopted and implemented and this can be done more easily when women occupy positions of responsibility both in the public and private sectors.

More importantly, women's political participation can be a determining factor in addressing the challenges that women are facing today, among which is combating the scourge of violence against women. In this regard, I would like to reiterate my country's firm support to the UN Special Rapporteur on violence against women, Ms. Rashida Manjoo, as well as to the Special Rapporteur on sexual violence in conflict, Ms. Agnes Callamard. Eliminating violence and prevention of all forms of violence against women remains an objective in that all Governments should relentlessly strive to achieve.

Madam Chair, Mr. Chairman,

Greece has constantly and steadily strove to maintain the above issues at the top of the international agenda and our efforts, these issues, among others, will be on our country's agenda within the framework of the Human Rights Council in the period 2023-2026. We, my country, in this regard, thank our Member States for their support in our candidature to the Human Rights Council.

Thank you.
