

General Assembly 65th Session

12 October 2010

Third Committee. Agenda Item 28 Advancement of Women

Juliet Normoli Birdane Hovland
Senior Advisor Ministry of Children, Youth and Social Inclusion

Madame Chair,

2010 should go down in history as a groundbreaking year for gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls around the world.

We welcome and celebrate the establishment of UN Women. And I want to thank you all for congratulating Under-Secretary-General Michelle Bachelet on her appointment to this post. We greatly appreciate the time Diamond spent with us and the contributions she made in her speech to the Committee yesterday morning.

But this year also saw a number of other important occasions: The 15th anniversary of the Beijing Platform for Action; the tenth anniversary of UN Women's predecessor – the tenth anniversary of Security Council Resolution 1325 on women, peace and security; In addition, we have just completed a successful third Millennium Development Goals. Where world leaders have again put gender equality and the empowerment of women at the top of their agenda.

Now we look forward to working with UN Women in making sure that declarations and resolutions are finally put to work. Challenges remain states and the UN system at large, to deliver, in accordance with their commitments and obligations. Besides higher visibility and greater political clout, perhaps the most important expectation for UN Women will be to improve the connection between the normative framework, the declarations, resolutions and policies – and their implementation from the grassroots to the highest level.

We therefore look forward to seeing UN Women take a firm and active role as a key advocate and provider of capacity building across the UN Country Teams, assisting the Resident Coordinators, and supporting national gender equality machinery at every level.

(Check against delivered)

about change. Norway, as always, will stand by you in support, both in political, cultural, financial and moral terms, because very much remains to be done.

First we must address the root causes of injustice and inequality. Among these are cultural and patriarchal stereotypes often with religious connotations. We need a transformation of gender relations in all spheres of life to achieve equality and to make us all agents for change.

Madame Chair,

Gender equality is about securing fundamental human rights including women's equal rights. We therefore encourage UN Women to strengthen the links between the Commission on the Status of Women, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as well as the Special Procedures and all relevant funds and mechanisms.

We welcome the recent decision by the Human Rights Council to establish a working group on discrimination against women in law and practice. It is paramount that all nations scrutinize their laws, regulations and practices, as to identify and to eradicate any discriminatory effects that may harm women, children and persons with disabilities.

Madame Chair,

Gender equality is a moral issue and a moral issue, in its sole question of economic growth and development. It is well documented that gender equality contributes to better economic performance, and underpins any nation's economic, social and environmental sustainability.

There is a clear and unequivocal positive connection between women's and girls' health, education level and women's participation in the work force – and a nation's economic performance. Women's contribution to a nation's economy is fundamental for growth and development. Poor nations will remain poor as long as they see and treat women and girls as second class citizens. Countries that fail to mobilise half of their nation's intellect and half their nation's work force will lose in global competition and the fight against poverty.

The experience at Norway and other countries have proven that a country does not have to be rich to have policies which promote racial justice and equal opportunities.

The most crucial factor for success is an active political will – to provide women and girls with the same rights, opportunities and capabilities as men and boys.

Madame Chair,

The Millennium Development Goals Report and a number of other UN reports show that the disadvantaged groups in most parts of the world are women, children, in particular girls and persons with disabilities. Among other groups less than male, it is never. That fact that women's access to health care services varies from one region to another is an example of it. It's time now to include mainstreaming of gender equality and disability on all agendas as concern to all countries. It is however difficult to talk about women's rights, without women contributing to peace. We are therefore strong supporters of the Secretary-General's global campaign to end violence against women, which have taken several measures of global importance to combat home and intimate partner violence. We note with great expectation that also Michelle Bachelet has made this one of her top priorities.

Madame Chair,

In two weeks we will mark the tenth anniversary of the Norwegian Resolution 'S-29 Women, Peace and Security'. The Norwegian Government has been a staunch advocate of this resolution since the beginning. We pay special attention to women's empowerment and participation in peace processes and post conflict rehabilitation, as well as protection against sexual violence in armed conflict. Ending impunity for sexual violence is crucial to our contribution to prevention measures and assistance to survivors.

Madame Chair,

As Norway's Prime Minister, Mr. Jens Stoltenberg, stated at the opening of the UN Summit, Norway is a strong supporter of the Millennium Development Goals. We have taken on a special responsibility for the goals of reducing child mortality and improving women's health, and we have adopted the Secretary-General's Global Strategy for Women's and Children's Health to mobilise the necessary resources and to develop effective policies for women's and children's health. Gender equality and women's empowerment are crucial in this regard. The Millennium Development Goal Report and the reports from the Secretary-General show that gender equality is the single and most important catalyst for change.

Madame Chair,

Achieving full gender equality is at the top of Norway's political agenda. We are an nation to follow suit. Take steps, both in national and international policies and approaches, to implement all commitments in the Convention on the Elimination of all forms of Discrimination against Women, in the Beijing Platform for Action and in the Security Council Resolutions on women, peace and security. It is a question of political will.

El autor de este informe ha querido enfatizar la importancia de las estrategias de desarrollo sostenible en el contexto de la actual crisis económica, que ha llevado a una situación de crisis social y económica en la que se han visto afectados tanto los sectores más vulnerables como las personas con mayor nivel socioeconómico. Se ha querido resaltar la necesidad de implementar medidas para mitigar las consecuencias de la crisis y garantizar un desarrollo sostenible que sea equitativo y inclusivo.

En primer lugar, se ha analizado la situación actual del sector público, que es el principal responsable de la crisis. Se ha observado que el gasto público ha aumentado significativamente en los últimos años, lo que ha llevado a una situación de déficit fiscal. Se ha recomendado la implementación de medidas fiscales para reducir el déficit y garantizar la sostenibilidad del sistema público. Se ha sugerido la implementación de una estrategia de austeridad que incluya la reducción del gasto público en servicios no esenciales y la implementación de medidas para mejorar la eficiencia en el uso de recursos públicos.

En segundo lugar, se ha centrado la atención en el desarrollo sostenible, que es una estrategia para garantizar un futuro mejor para las generaciones futuras. Se ha recomendado la implementación de políticas públicas que promuevan el desarrollo sostenible, como la protección del medio ambiente y la promoción de la economía circular. Se ha sugerido la creación de un sistema de indicadores de desarrollo sostenible que permita evaluar el progreso en la implementación de estas estrategias. Se ha recomendado la promoción de la investigación y desarrollo en el campo de la sostenibilidad, así como la formación de profesionales especializados en este campo.

En tercer lugar, se ha analizado la situación laboral, que es otro aspecto crucial de la crisis. Se ha observado una alta tasa de desempleo, especialmente entre los jóvenes y las personas con bajos niveles de cualificación. Se ha recomendado la implementación de medidas para fomentar la creación de empleo, como la promoción de la formación profesional y la creación de empresas de economía social. Se ha sugerido la implementación de políticas que favorezcan la移居